Old Oak.

American Architect. Of late it has become the fashion to collect old oak; the revival of decorative art during the last few years has again turned attention to old work and its value is now fully recognized. it is becoming rare. Ten years ago numerous specimens were to be had in the old timbered farm houses in Lan cashire and Cheshire; much of it still remained as it had been for centuries, and I have many pleasant recollections of the old kitchens, with open fire places and low ceiling well sup ported on oak beams, filled with grand old tables, corner cupboards, buffets, and pewter racks, well stored with the brightly polished pewter. I re-member some instances where the old ak has been put to very ignominious uses. I have seen fine old coffers used as corn bins in stables, and I rescued once a poble buffett, which a boy had turned into the home of four pink eyed ferrets. Some years ago Belgium was an excellent field, and during one trip there I collected in Antwerp, Ghent, Maline, Bruges and the little towns ever saw; last year I went over the same ground without finding one desirable antique, although I found lots of imitations were to be had, and were being sold as antique. There is an old man in Ghent who imitates them very cleverly, in fact, so successfully that it is really difficult to tell the spurious ones from the genuine. One day (it was Saturday.) I went to see him; he showed me several specimens which I pronounced shams; he was very indignant and assured me they were his aggient veritable antiquities. I went away, and next day, Sunday coming out of a church near his place, I found his door yard open, and got a view through it of the old sinner very ousy with a pot of ammonia and a brush, staining up a new cabinet into a "veritable antique." I went into quite a collection of old panels, molds and carvings which he manufactured into tables and cabinets, and sold as

> The Panama Canal. Economist.

The Panama Canal Company has held its first annual meeting of shareholders. The operations during the first year have been quite preliminary, M. De Lesseps, in the report read, reminded the proprietors, who have manifested some impatience to see the digging of the canal commenced, that according to the original plans the period of organization would not ser-minate before the end of 1882. The results attained, he said, had only tended to confirm the belief that the canal could be opened within six years from the commencement of the work of excavation. A great portion of the geological formation through which the canal will be made had been classed as "hard rock," but more complete surveys have proved that much of it consists of sand, common earth, and soft rock that may be ex-cavated without boring. This dis-covery will permit the company to effect a considerable saving in the cost of the work. Returns of the sanitary condition of the isthmus also show that the death rate among the personnel of the company has not exceeded that among large assemblies of work-men in Europe. During the first four months of 1882 the average number of persons employed was 2060, and the number of deaths from age, accident or Alexandria.

The first call on the capital subscribed produced a sum of about 74-000,000 francs, of which 40,000,000 francs, of which 40,000,000 francs, and the second call of 125 francs per share on 500,000 shares, made at the commencement of the year, was duly met. It was originally proposed that of the 600,000,000 francs required for the construction of the required for the construction of the canal, 300,000,000 would be obtained by shares, and 300,000,000 by the issue of bonds. The meeting authorized the whole. The Committee on Ways and Means authorized this report by a party vote of six to four.

Every one who is at all familiar with the Grant administration will remember the abonymous letter episode. This followed after the Belknap scandal. The first that was heard of it by General Williams was through his wife receiving two scurrillous and abusive letters, sent anonymously through the posteffice Mrs. Williams carried these two letters to her husband and showed them to him, and asked him what she should do. The letters contained vile attacks upon the private character of several of the ladies of the Cabinet, and made the most disgusting inuendoes concerning Mrs. Williams' own private life. Mr. Williams said to his wife:

"It has been the rule of my life to ters that had been written to her. Thereupon all the rest of the ladies, with the exception of Mrs. Williams produced anonymous letters of a similar character. Mrs. Williams had destroyed her letters, and when she announced that she had destroyed them it was noticed that a peculiar look ran around the circle. These ladies who had been envious of Mrs Williams' "social popularity remarked afterward that the whole affair had a very queer look. It was from such little hints and suggestions that there ultimately appeared a paragraph in one of the Sunday papers here charging Mrs. Williams with the au thorship of those vile letters. fact was used against General Williams when he was nominated for the office of Chief Justice of the United States. General Grant, however, took great pains to assure the Attorney General and his wife that he did not believe a single word of the stories that were being circulated. It was none the less disagreeable, however. Several weeks after that General Grant sent for Mr. Williams and showed him an anonymous letter that he had received. General Grant said: "I will show you only a part of this letterenough to indicate to you that the handwriting of it is the same as that in all the other aponymous letters. It contains the most vile and disgusting charges against the character of Mrs. Belknap and Mrs. Williams." He says: "The letter in itself is a positive Says: refutation of the cruel slander that Mrs. Williams had anything to do with the writing of these letters, and I merely show it to you for the purpose of telling you that I mean to at once put an end to these stories." Grant afterward showed enough of these letters to the wives of other Cabinet members as to assure them
